The Environmental and Energy Study Institute (EESI) invites you to a briefing series on federal programs that currently deliver a host of climate, environmental, economic, and social benefits nationwide. Experts and practitioners will discuss how these programs are working on-the-ground to deliver value to constituents across geographies, in both urban and rural settings. The series covers federal programs in climate financing, energy efficiency, climate adaptation, and conservation.

The second briefing in the series will cover federal energy efficiency programs administered by the U.S. Department of Energy that support millions of jobs and deliver direct, meaningful savings to homeowners, consumers, and businesses—all while reducing the stresses and strains on the U.S. energy system.

Energy efficiency also improves the sustainability and resilience of communities and contributes to near-term reductions in pollution and greenhouse gas emissions. Panelists will discuss how all these benefits play out on the ground from the state, private sector, and federal agency perspectives. Panelists include:

- Michael Furze, Assistant Director, Energy Division at Washington State Department of Commerce
- Chris Hess, Vice President of Public Affairs, Eaton
- Vincent Barnes, Senior Vice President of Policy and Research, Alliance to Save Energy
- Jennifer Schafer, Executive Director, Federal Performance Contracting Coalition

Sign up for the full briefing series, which will run through March 2022:

- Financing Inclusive Clean Energy Investments in Rural America
- Energy Efficiency Means Business

- Building a Durable National Framework for Large Landscape Conservation

These events are free and open to the public.
