The Environmental and Energy Study Institute (EESI) invites you to join us for a briefing on the implications of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change's (IPCC's) most recent report—the Sixth Assessment Report—for the upcoming international climate negotiations in Egypt (COP27) and for work on Capitol Hill. The IPCC Assessment Reports are designed to pull together information from around the globe on climate change, including on the physical science; climate impacts and adaptation; and possible greenhouse gas emission trajectories and mitigation opportunities.

Panelists, who participated in drafting sections of the report, will discuss key findings from the report and how the information can be used by decision makers at the national and international levels.

Speakers for this forum are:

- Venkatachalam “Ram” Ramaswamy, Director of the Geophysical Fluid Dynamics Laboratory, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration; Working Group I Review Editor, Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change
- Debora Ley, Economic Affairs Officer, Energy and Natural Resources, United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean; Working Group II Lead Author, IPCC
- Nan Zhou, Senior Scientist, Technical Program Manager - Net Zero World Initiative, Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory; Working Group III Lead Author, IPCC
- Lynn Price, Affiliate (retired Senior Scientist), Energy Technologies Area, Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory; Working Group III Lead Author (1994-2014), Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change
