The Environmental and Energy Study Institute (EESI) invites you to join us for a briefing about the first global stocktake of efforts to address climate change. This stocktaking process, established by the Paris Agreement, aims to assess the world's collective progress towards the goal of keeping global average temperature rise well below 2°C (3.6°F). For more than a year, government representatives and non-governmental stakeholders from around the world have contributed to this process, which will inform a report that will be released ahead of the international climate negotiations in Dubai (COP28). Panelists will discuss the implications of the global stocktake for greenhouse gas emissions reductions and climate adaptation in the United States and abroad and consider how it will inform discussions at COP28.

Introductory remarks by:

- Rep. Kathy Castor, U.S. Representative (D-Fla.)

Speakers for this forum are:

- Hannah Roeyer, Lead, independent Global Stocktake (iGST), Climateworks Foundation
- Anne Olhoff, International Senior Advisor, CONCITO; Chief Scientific Editor of the Emissions Gap Report, U.N. Environment Programme
- Nathan Hultman, Founder and Director, Center for Global Sustainability; Professor, School of Public Policy, University of Maryland
- Jeffrey Qi, Policy Advisor I, International Institute for Sustainable Development (IISD)
