The Environmental and Energy Study Institute (EESI) invites you to join us for a briefing to review what took place during the international climate negotiations in Egypt (COP27) and why it matters for Congress.

With dozens of events and negotiating sessions happening at any one time during the two weeks of a U.N. climate summit, it can be challenging to keep up with all the details. This briefing will review the key outcomes of COP27—and what they mean for Congress—and provide context and nuance to the main headlines coming out of the meeting. Panelists will provide perspectives and key takeaways from the federal government, U.S. states, philanthropy, and nongovernmental organization perspectives.

Introductory remarks: Senator Jacky Rosen (D-Nevada)

Speakers for this session include:

- Jesse Young, Senior Advisor, Special Presidential Envoy for Climate, U.S. Department of State
- Brendan Guy, Director, International Climate, Natural Resources Defense Council
- Preety Bhandari, Senior Advisor, Global Climate Program and the Finance Center, World Resources Institute
- Casey Katims, Executive Director, U.S. Climate Alliance

This briefing is part of a Congressional briefing series, What Congress Needs to Know About COP27:
